The table was stocked with omelets, oatmeal scones, cheese biscuits, potato salad, and green beans. In the photo's I'm sitting with some of the cousins. We were having a good time until the next table got into the conversation about whether or not the kids have babies yet. This kind of thing makes me a little anxious. I'm trying to be laid back about it but the older we get, the more of a worry it becomes. Sometimes I hear rumors and don't know how to protect or help out. I want my kids to have babies, not that I don't want them to experience other things. I'm hoping they'll use restraint and plan ahead so they don't get tricked into that. It would be nice if they could do it while they're still in college, but who knows? For those of you who know L, he's super sensitive to what people say about him. I'm proud of him because he's so polite and listen to what people say and don't engage unless he has a good reason to. But I still worry that one day he will hear something that is very hurtful to him and will have to deal with it in some bad way. I just want him to be very secure in himself, know what he wants, and be fully aware of what he's being told. It makes me nervous whenever 09e8f5149f
