Dec 01, 2013 · (what would you do if...?) - Power text to speech reader 2.31 crack .CES 2020: Head-mounted display tech will let you read, browse and get coffee HPE will use its new Freedom Imaging System to display virtual objects, or VOs, at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES) in Las Vegas, the company announced on Thursday. Freedom Imaging System is based on the company’s Real-time Eye Tracker, which allows users to look at what’s in front of them while the system keeps track of their direction of gaze. Using the tracker, Freedom can overlay virtual content on the real-world view. “Freedom Imaging System is the latest iteration of the Freedom platform, bringing out-of-body experience and virtual reality (VR) into the hands of consumers for their home and workplace,” said Randy Gruber, HPE’s director of product marketing for Real-time Eyetracking at CES 2020. Freedom Imaging System uses the Real-time Eye Tracker to overlay imagery on the real-world view. According to HPE, the system can be used to read and read content, to browse the Internet or to work on and customize a desired content at home or at work. The Freedom platform, which HPE acquired last year, takes advantage of advances in head-mounted displays (HMD) technology and has been limited to 3DVR and VR experiences. HPE is also developing peripheral devices for HMDs, such as the Freedom Lens, which is designed to replace a smartphone, for VR and AR experiences. Although HPE is at CES, the technology is available now, and HPE is looking to partner with retailers to make it available to consumers. A Luxury TV? HPE’s head-mounted display tech, like the Freedom Imaging System, is also being touted by Sky and Bang & Olufsen as a potential replacement for traditional TVs. 3da54e8ca3
