The success rate is much higher! Code: var key = ""; For this task, the most common type of random number generator in use is the pseudo random number generator. The pseudorandom number generator was invented in the 1950s by economist John von Neumann and applied in computer simulations by Charles Bennett in his method for hiding the locations of weapons in a game of chess. This method of hiding the locations has been applied to other games as well, including checkers and solitaire. The basic idea of the pseudorandom number generator is that it creates a sequence of numbers by using a deterministic rule to generate the numbers, such as simply numbering them in order starting at 1. The sequence of numbers is then thrown into a container, where it appears to be random. This container is generally called the source of randomness. One of the major applications of the pseudorandom number generator is to hide the location of weapons in a game of chess. Knoppix is a Linux distribution specialized for running from the CD-ROM or DVD-ROM. It also includes a full set of tools needed to create a bootable CD (makeiso, cdrkit, mkinitrd, md5sums, etc.), and even provides instructions for installing from the Internet. The idea of Knoppix is that it is easy to prepare and verify a bootable CD using Knoppix, and then burn it with a common CD writer. You can then boot from the CD and use a web browser or other software to access the same tools that you would if you were installing from a computer, including the Internet, most office software (e.g. word processors, spreadsheets, etc.), and all the drivers needed for the software. Knoppix also includes the latest version of Linux kernel and the applications you need to run a full featured Linux system (such as the Gnome desktop, X Windows, and the Xfce desktop). The term freeware refers to software (usually Open Source) which is distributed under a free license, but with a stipulation - Freeware is not normally accompanied by a warranty and therefore its use is at your own risk. Freeware tends to be used by people who cannot afford to pay for software or who wish to give something back to the software development community. Most software found on the Internet is freeware, because that is the easiest way to ensure it is distributed. Freeware
