* Well, no.. more like boring, but in a jestful way. Now, let's see how we can create a simple program to send HTTP request to our server with custom headers using Node.js. In this post, you'll learn how to implement a simple HttpModule in Node.js application to process HTTP requests and HTTP responses. In my previous post, we saw how we can create a simple Node.js application using Express framework. In this post, we'll discuss some useful HttpEventHandlers in Express application. A nice example to create the API in node.js there is Nodestack. Nodestack is using Node.js for create RESTful API using express.js, Jade.js and other helpers. Now, What is HttpModule? In general, HttpModule is implemented to define global event handlers for all HTTP events in an application. It's a built-in module in Node.js (a derivative of EventEmitter). We can use HttpModule to modify or add new functionality to the existing request/response cycle. This comes in handy when we need to perform some extra tasks before or after the response is sent to an end user. HTTPS Example: All in one Example HTTP Example: All in one Example Now, We are ready to create our HttpModule example. To start with, we need to create 2 modules. Create a HttpModule module. Init our own handler for our own HttpModule. Like this: var http = require('http'); // Create our own http instance. var server = http.createServer(function

Cleithrophobia, in psychology, fear of closets or of closeness. Besides the common feeling of discomfort with the prospect of going into a small room or of entering a small place (e.g., an elevator, a train, a store, etc.), patients with cleithrophobia report feeling apprehensive even about the thought of being in the same room with another person. Cleithrophobia has also been referred to as andiprophobia or disgarophobia. The condition has been partially linked to fear of suffocation. Signs and symptoms According to the International Classification of Diseases (ICD-10), the fear of suffocation is listed as a symptom of an anxiety disorder of unspecified origin, but it may also be brought on by circumstantial or idiosyncratic events. Cleithrophobia appears in all forms of diagnostic criteria and as persistent and incapacitating fear in patients. Cleithrophobics often feel anxious about the claustrophobic feelings they experience. Anxiety and distress may be triggered in the claustrophobic by fears of being unable to escape. Although panic attacks are not part of the diagnosis, cleithrophobics commonly experience fear of faintness, fear of dying, and agitation; anxiety when having to share a small room or with other people, accompanied by increased heart rate, sweating, nausea, and dizziness; or worry of breaking into a sweat and passing out, among other reactions associated with panic attacks. Cleithrophobics may also feel uneasiness and jitters before, while, and after an appointment inside a closet, panic attacks, and anxious responses to small objects such as plastic bags, which may be overlooked and misunderstood. Cleithrophobia has had various names, such as fear of being alone, fear of being closed in, fear of being alone by a door, aversion to closets, fear of small confined spaces, fear of being in small enclosed space, fear of tunnels, fear of suffocation, fear of push down, fear of confined spaces, fear of enclosed rooms, claustrophobia, and claustrophobic fear. The first formal description of claustrophobia was made by the Danish psychiatrist and neurologist Hans Tietgen in 1889, in Sweden. Tietgen described that some people can become aroused from an involuntary fear of enclosed spaces. In 1923, Professor Otto Loewi of the University of Vienna described the feelings of claustrophobia. He termed the condition

[Vaccine for protection of poultry, inactivated oil adjuvant vaccine]. A new term, 'oil adjuvant vaccine' (OAV) was announced. For developing OAV, I suggest to examine if it is a vaccine that can be applied to commercial poultry, and if so, whether it has any drawbacks related to safety issues. It is expected that OAV has its merit in lower cost of production and induction of antigen-specific superior IgA. However, as that kind of vaccine raises an antibody response by non-specific activation and confers a systemic immune response, such infection should be prevented in human, fowl and poultry. Though many reports suggest a possibility that OAV has some drawbacks with respect to safety as well as induction of allergic response, the present study will tell whether or not using much higher antigen dose elicits an adverse effect to the host. If it is proved to have any drawbacks, it is possible to avoid them by modifying the vaccine formulation, finding a better adjuvant and by using lower dose of the antigen. With the advance of new vaccinating techniques, OAV can be handled by oneself by homeopathic method that is simple and nontoxic.Tag Best Sellers The role of the fertility clinic in surrogacy is primarily to ensure a baby's safety, given the life-long prospects of carrying a baby.The role of the wombless couple in surrogacy is to create a family and have a baby.Surrogacy works in such a way that the donor egg or ...
