Follow the heroine on her quest to find a cure to the world's undead problem. [Here is the first one I wrote for PFRP.] [Written in 2002] In a land of enchantment and magic, where fantasy is real, and science fictional, there is a new world order the average person doesn't see. Day in and day out, monsters like toadstools, slimes, molds, and fungi stalk unsuspecting humans. From Fairyland, to Hinterlands, and Mountain Temples, to thriving cities, there are various eerie haunts that conceal creatures the majority has never seen. Enter Sara Cheyne, an avid Mythomaniac throughout her formative years. From here, Ms. Cheyne makes her way to the lands of Gransys. Where she will stipple the narrow passages of sage parlors; shiver in the cold; and look for help. But what better help than a fellow Mythomaniac, Paladin Anne? In addition to teaching Sara all she knows, this Pal will walk her through the dangers on the quest to find a cure to the world's undead problem. BlizzCon 2019 had a number of good presentations that looked promising for the future of World of Warcraft: Battle for Azeroth, including the first gathering of prospective players outside of BlizzCon.

I was pleased to see that Mythic Monsters, the more story-focused team working on World of Warcraft: Battle for Azeroth, was looking to include a second set of campaigns, something which should help keep players interested in the game even after the release of Patch 8.2. In particular, I'm looking forward to seeing what tools they're considering for their upcoming campaigns.

System Requirements:

The minimum system requirements for Fallout 4 are a CPU of 3 GHz (or faster) and 2 GB of RAM. If you're planning on using modded addons and have a dual graphics card setup, we suggest a system that is capable of running games at or above the recommended minimum spec. These systems will also be able to use the new SSAO feature. Minimum specs: To enable the SSAO feature, your system needs to be at least Intel Core i7-3537U or Ryzen 535U or higher or AMD equivalent.
