Below are explanations for some of the more useful features of Photoshop. You may find this section helpful if you are considering buying Photoshop. Photoshop CC has five layers, and a canvas size of 300 ppi (pixels per inch), which is the same as what is used in printing. A pixel is the smallest unit of measurement for a digital image and is about 72 dpi. The canvas size is the pixel size of the image, which is the amount of information that is stored for an image. Photoshop CS6 (2016) has the same layers and canvas size as Photoshop CC, but it allows the use of the brush tool. To use the brush tool in Photoshop, go to the Brush Tool (B) tool from the Select Tool (L). In the menu, choose the Brush Tool (B) and choose a Brush Preset. There are a number of Brush Presets in Photoshop, the most popular being the Basic Brushes, but you can also create your own brushes to use with Photoshop. The Brush Tool (B) is really a set of tools that come in different layers within Photoshop. The tools that make up the Brush Tool are: the Watercolor Tool (W), the Round Brush Tool (R), the Pencil Tool (P), the Airbrush Tool (A), the Blob Brush Tool (B), the Eraser Tool (E), the Pen Tool (P), the Move Tool (M), the Object Selection Tool (O), the Rounded Rectangle Tool (R), the Polygonal Lasso Tool (L), and the Magic Wand Tool (W). In the Brush Presets in Photoshop, you can usually find one that is similar to a photo-editing program like Adobe Lightroom, but that is not always the case. The Brush Tool (B) can create a new raster (bitmap) image in Photoshop. The process of using the Brush Tool in Photoshop is the same as any image editing program. Click and drag a canvas to create a new layer of a new image. When a new layer is created, it's time to load an image into that new layer. A raster image file (bitmap) is a non-vector file that is made up of a large number of pixels, or picture elements, which can be manipulated to manipulate or edit an image. You can see the pixels on a screen or see them as a printed image in a magazine. A vector image

Q: Update parent without re-rendering child with Parse I have a header and a body component and one interaction between them is to open/close some panels: const Header = () => (Loading...> ...) export default withTranslation(Header) const HeaderContainer = ((config))=> { // do something with the config return } const HeaderBody = () => (Loading...> ...) export default withTranslation(HeaderBody) const HeaderBodyContainer = (...)=> (Loading...>) export default withTranslation(HeaderBodyContainer) The HeaderContainer is placed in an App component that listens to HeaderContainerConfig change, which is passed as a prop to the component: export class App extends Component { constructor() { super() this.state = { bodyContainerOpen: false, config: {}, } this.handler = this.handler.bind(this) } //... componentDidMount() { this.handler() } handler () { this.props.config.bodyContainerOpen? this.setState({ bodyContainerOpen: true, config: this.props.config, }) : this.setState({ bodyContainerOpen: false, config: this.props.config, }) } }

Inside the HeaderContainer I have a switch that decides whether to render HeaderBodyContainer. For that I need to pull the config and render different things: Loading...>
