

. Briton Arran, 1865. The structure of urban civilization can produce. research is in progress and data are coming in at a very slow rate. En60079part14pdf42 Harwood, Edward. Renewal of Europe (1922). In the New World, the data from the Broadview Ranch survey were more complete, since the ranch was more accessible to investigators. Hungarian Institute of Archaeology. In the period from 1500 to 1400 B. C., when Central European peoples were creating their own cultures and. The Basque Country, although a pastoral culture, reflects population densities that are similar to those in other late Bronze Age cultures in the World. The trade in Gudarz-dag urns was widespread in Europe and the Bronze Age ended in the 4th millennium B. C. The regions that were most heavily affected by the bronze age culture were the northern Danube. The bulk of the population lived in villages scattered across fields. By 4200 B. C., the Pre-Pottery Neolithic, a transitional period, was followed by the Neolithic cultures. During this time, pottery was invented, towns were formed and subsistence agriculture replaced nomadic hunting and gathering. Some regions, such as the Mediterranean, organized into powerful city-states. These new farming societies created a surplus of food, and as a consequence the population soared. These factors led to the development of urban civilization. Archaeologists divide the Neolithic from the Pre-Pottery Neolithic with the appearance of polished stone axes, dart points, and lithic implements. As populations expanded, farming became more efficient. The Early Neolithic period culminated with the appearance of the first agricultural centres, such as Catal Huyuk in Anatolia. In the European and Near Eastern Middle Neolithic, a new style of pottery appeared. Ancient History British History. Early Hellenistic history - Historical documents, economy, trade etc.. Greek History. Greek city states. Aegean History. Greek world. Classical Antiquity - Ancient Hellenistic history - Classical Etruscan history. Roman History. Roman Empire - Roman history. Medieval History. Germanic and Byzantine history - Europe and Africa under the rule of the Roman Empire - Middle East and Arabian Peninsula. Early Modern History. Early modern history. Modern History - Ptolemaic

